

Lani Smith

48 hours is far too short a time to kill animals, It does not give adequate time for owners to track down missing pets, or indeed ensure they contactable in that time. There are many times when animals may be in the care of others, and owners uncontactable for short periods of time.

Given this is an animal welfare act, how can reducing the time allowed for animals to be returned to owners before they are potentially killed, be in the welfare interests of that animal.